

Wall Street Becomes Bullish On Strength of St. Louis Advances

MARKET BUOYANT AND PRICES PUT UP

Rise of Americans in London Gives First Impetus.

GAINS ALL THROUGH LIST

Preferred Steel Advances Over a Point on Conviction That Regular Quarterly Dividend Will Be Paid.

NEW YORK, July 6.—The stock market today burst into absolute buoyancy, and there was a large increase in the volume of transactions, including fresh accessions of commission house buying. The dominant influence upon speculative sentiment was undoubtedly exerted by the nominee and platform of the Democratic National Convention at St. Louis, which was thoroughly satisfactory to business interests. The publication of what was claimed to be the draft of the Democratic platform enabled some line to be obtained upon the probable utterances of the convention, and the declarations were regarded as conservative in the main.

The sharp advances reported in American stocks in London, gave the first stimulus to the local market. Prices through a larger part of the list advanced 1 per cent and over, with only ordinary fluctuations. A new feature in the railroad list was the strength in Pennsylvania Railroad, developed by aggressive operations against the shorts. Other leaders in the advances were St. Paul, Union Pacific, and Wabash preferred. In the industrial group, United States Steel preferred was prominent, with a gain of 1 1/2 per cent, strengthening the conviction that the regular quarterly dividend was assured. Other strong features were United States Rubber preferred, Consolidated Gas, and Westinghouse.

At the end of the first hour, there was some moderation in the activity of the dealings, but the tempo of the market continued strongly bullish in spite of realizations. Government bonds were unchanged. Other bonds strong. The market continued strong and active. London houses bought in all 40,000 to 50,000 shares.

THE BABY AND THE ELEPHANT.

It was out at the Zoo, one Sunday afternoon, and the usual contingent of children were staring with "Dunk" or less awe and admiration at "Dunk," the elephantine elephant. Among them was a dimpled, chubby baby girl, beaming with smiles, whose proud father lifted her up that she might inspect the enormous beast more on terms of equality. Her father was awaited with some anxiety by mamma, who feared that the three-year-old might be afraid. Finally it came. Up spoke the midwife in dulcet tones:

"Oh, isn't he cute! I wish I could have him to sit in mine lap!"

WHISKY VALUABLE TO STIMULATE HEART.

Whisky is valuable to stimulate heart. Cauterization to prevent local infection.

NEW YORK, JUNE 29.—DR. CHARLES H. HALL, THE SURGEON IN CHARGE OF THE RECEPTION HOSPITAL AT CONEY ISLAND, SAYS THAT HE EXPECTED A QUICK RECOVERY IN THE CASE OF BRANDU, A HINDU SNAKE-CHARMER, WHO WAS SEVERELY BITTEN BY A LARGE RATTLESNAKE ON THURSDAY AFTERNOON, AT CONEY ISLAND.

This man had just begun to exhibit the reptile, after taking it from its box, when it suddenly turned on him and darted its fangs into his left arm, a little above the wrist. As soon as he could replace the snake in its box and reach the rear of the enclosure, Brandu backed at the wound with his knife, trying to cut it out, and also attempting to suck out the poison. An attendant applied a tourniquet to the arm, and the injured man drank about half a pint of whisky.

WHISKY HELPS.

He was promptly taken to the Reception Hospital, near Seaside Park, which is a branch of the Kings County Hospital, and is used for emergency cases at Coney Island. There at least another and the head nurse, Miss Bailey, cauterized his wound, which Dr. Hall soon cauterized again. The principal object of the cauterization, it was explained, was to prevent local infection.

When asked why the poisonous fangs of the snake had not been extracted before its exhibition on the stage, as before they are handled by the so-called "charmers," Dr. Hall said he never dreamed that the rattlesnake formerly shown by Brandu had died, and that this one had only just been added to the show. His handler supposed, until bitten, that its fangs had been removed.

SWELLING A SYMPTOM.

In regard to the effects of poison from a snake bite, the doctor said that there was usually a good deal of swelling of the part affected, which was red, tense, throbbing, and painful. The victim's pulse was generally very slow, gradually growing weaker. There was a rise in his temperature, rapidly followed, within twenty-four hours, by a state of general collapse, unless radical measures of relief were taken.

The general method of treatment, after cauterization and a liberal administration of whisky, is usually controlled by free use of opiates. Wet antiseptic dressings are applied to the region of the bite, and the patient is kept on a milk diet.

PROMPT AID NEEDED.

Promptness of remedial treatment is of great importance in all cases of snake poison, and is believed to have been the principal factor in saving the life of Brandu. In regard to whose recovery there were grave doubts at first, Dr. Hall said that he would be able to leave the hospital in good condition by tomorrow, under instruction to report from time to time for examination.

THE SAME SURGEON HAD ANOTHER CASE OF SNAKE BITE FROM THE SAME SHOW, ABOUT THREE WEEKS AGO.

The same surgeon had another case of snake bite from the same show, about three weeks ago. An employee was bitten on the arm by a snake, of what species the doctor was not sure, and a painful swelling was caused, but this gradually passed away, with no other symptoms developed. The man was able to leave the hospital in about forty-eight hours.
